Introduction

Everyone can feel lonely sometimes, and often there doesn't need to be a reason to feel like this, and this is fine. Sometimes there may be a reason – the loss of a loved one, losing contact with family and friends, losing enjoyment from work and social activities, or health problems that make it difficult to get out and do the things you love.

Sometimes loneliness can pass, however there are things you can do to feel less lonely and improve your mental wellbeing.

Loneliness can affect anyone, at any stage of life, and the best thing to remember is that you are not alone.

We have compiled some helpful services and contacts in this leaflet, to offer help and advice for loneliness and to improve mental well-being, as well as some useful contacts for carers that may be finding their role difficult at times.
